Chemical Sunscreen vs. Physical Sunscreen

Chemical sunscreen ingredients typically are absorbed into the epidermis, are thought to be metabolized by the body, and sometimes cause allergic reactions. Physical sunscreen ingredients lie on top of the skin's surface and are not absorbed into the epidermis or metabolized by the body. Many companies combine both chemical and physical sunscreens to enhance a product's SPF abilities. What ingredients make it a chemical sunscreen? Octinoxate, Octocrylene, Octisalate, PABA, Octyl Dimethyl Paba, Oxybenzone and Avebenzone. When these ingredients are used on their own they provide partial UV protection. What ingredients make it a physical sunscreen? Titanium and zinc oxide. Physical Sunscreen ingredients form a protective barrier over the skin, stopping UV rays from penetrating the skin's surface. Both titanium dioxide and zinc oxide offer total UVB protection; however zinc offers far more UVA protection than titanium dioxide.
